Students in this level are expected to perform the activities below: - Evaluate the current strategies and techniques used by the staff to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the organization. - Develop methods to ensure that the staff are organized to best serve the needs of the company. - Use the critical thinking skills required to develop policies and rules that are fair and efficient to the customers and employees. - Make detailed presentations of the methods used to achieve the level goals of the organization. While in the training, students are expected to conduct these activities: - Assist in the review of company policies and procedures. - Plan to analyze and evaluate strategies and techniques that can be used to improve efficiency. - Demonstrate the ability to use the critical thinking skills required to create policies and rules that are fair and efficient to the customers and employees. - Receive and follow up on instructions from a teacher. Expectations Students should conduct themselves in a professional manner at all times in the training sessions. Students should be conscious of their behavior and should model proper etiquette. Frustrated that the U.S. Supreme Court declined to review its Sixth Circuit decision that upheld the constitutionality of Obamacare, Chief Justice John Roberts and his fellow justices this morning offered a brief response to the outside groups that have filed briefs in the case. Chief Justice Roberts wrote in the court's order declining to review the Sixth Circuit decision that, while he "finds it unnecessary to reach these questions of first impression," he'd be "the last to suggest that this court will shy away from addressing them when its jurisdiction is properly invoked." That jurisdiction, according to the chief, was based on the "extensive public debate about the constitutionality of the Affordable Care Act." It was that debate — the public controversy — that led the Supreme Court to hold in 2012's United States v. Virginia that it has jurisdiction to review the constitutionality of the
