This blog is about how very difficult it is to be a parent these days. Today it's hard to get your kids to brush their teeth or change out of their pj's in the morning. Kids have no respect for authority, and parents know it. They know their kids are going to do whatever they want because they can. They know very well that they can control all of their kids if they wanted to. And so why should they bother trying? We have seen how quickly these kids turn into little adults. Kids today are glued to their phones. Cell phones are everything to them. Kids today are texting all the time. And they're so good at it. Texting is so easy that they make it look like it's no big deal. And these kids forget what it means to ever talk to a parent. They're so good at ignoring their parents that they're almost never seen again. And this is what parents don't like. This is why parents will lose patience. This is why parents often give up all hope. Because, as they have learned, it's impossible to control a teenager with half of your brain. But one of the things that has always kept us parents going is the notion that our kids might one day turn into adults. We know that the older we are, the more likely it is that we'll encounter something we can't handle. So we

What's new in FORTIFY:

Knauf Brethedge Knauf Corporation was an American manufacturer of textile extruders, and the company produced the first extruder to use steam cutting. The company was founded by Nathaniel Knauf and his brother-in-law A. S. Knauf in 1903. Brethedge The company originally traded as The E.J. Knauf Company, which had been founded in 1893 by Edward J. Knauf. Edward J. Knauf died in 1883. His sons were Edward Jr. and Nathaniel J. Knauf. In 1883, the brothers Nathaniel J. and Edward Jr. Knauf incorporated a new manufacturing facility at 46 Washington Ave. in Dover, New York. Both of the brothers were “self-educated artisans” and learned how to operate the machines; Nathaniel was an apprentice, and Edward Jr. was at home and taught himself. The new company became known as E. J. Knauf Company, and Nathaniel Knauf was for some years in charge of manufacturing. The brothers Richard and Daniel V. Knauf also worked for the company. The brother-in-law, A. S. Knauf, moved to New York City after being trained as an engineer, worked at the company, and was the general manager until 1904 when he sold his interest in the business. Nathaniel Knauf was the first to apply steam cutting to textile machinery, in 1902. Later in the same year, a director of the company was appointed to provide the steam required for steam cutting. Working Conditions The trade union for the textile industry called for mandatory factories to be set up within the New York City limits. They wanted the minimum wage to be $1, and that the standard for employment contracts be set. The workers were paid only $1 an hour until then. When the workers started receiving $1 an hour, the only concern that company had was to pay the minimum wage, and no extra wage would be paid. There were also concerns about the O-Ring Patent being used by several companies that were purchasing new machinery. The patents were used by the Knauf family, but this was not understood by the company’s employees. The company also continued to pay a royalty on machines sold; however, not all machines were sold, as a number were given away to promote and advertise to other companies.
