A: Use strpos() instead of strpos(). strpos() will work. strpos() will check for the string in the entire string. Carcinogenic risk assessment: a case study on heavy-metal-contaminated paddy rice. A framework was developed in the Czech Republic in 2009 by the National Institute of Public Health, which is intended to assess the carcinogenic risks posed by consumption of contaminated food. This risk assessment involved the use of retrospective dose-response models, based on the estimated weekly and monthly intakes of carcinogenic heavy metals from the consumption of paddy rice. The range of levels in seven representative concentration categories were evaluated according to the reference dose using the approach known as population risk assessment and the concept of an infinite time horizon was applied to cover the entire lifetime of the individual. The highest levels of heavy metals in the paddy rice sample were those of cadmium (61,900µg kg(-1)), lead (11,900µg kg(-1)) and chromium (5,500µg kg(-1)). These levels of heavy metal contamination are lower than those in other industrial countries or geographical areas but other types of sources are also responsible for exposure of the consumers. It was concluded that carcinogenic risks related to the consumption of paddy rice are low, but increased if the intensive farming practices are allowed to continue.Q: how to wait for the result in nodeJS before continue? In nodeJS, i got the result in a success callback to another function, but i want it to return result before the continue is done. How to do that? function produceByCurrentTime() { var startTime = Date.now() * 1000; // some code var rp = socket.request('/produce/', function(result) { return result.status == 200 && result.data.length > 0; }); socket.listen(6379); socket.on('message', function(data) { console.log(data.body); }); } I am using isomorphic js, I want to wait to hear the result before continue with the code.
