[Importance of ovarian superovulation for the conception rate of in vitro maturation (IVM) in the mare]. Ovarian superovulation is a widely used method to induce superovulation. Thus, it has been considered as an important tool for the development of an IVM/IVF program in the mare. We have been regularly asked during the past years why the conception rate of mares treated with an IVM/IVF protocol is so poor. We are aware that the answer to this question is far from straightforward. In order to better define the significance of ovarian superovulation for the success of an IVM/IVF program in mares, we performed experiments to compare the effects of different ovarian stimulation protocols. For this purpose, we compared the endocrine profile and the pregnancy rate after the follicular phase was induced with a combination of equine gonadotropin (eCG) + equine follicle stimulating hormone (eFSH), or eCG only, or a combination of eCG + equine corticotropin (eCT) and the two eFSH preparations. The effect of ovarian stimulation on endocrine profiles was determined by measuring FSH, P4 and LH levels and by performing gonadotropin-releasing hormone (GnRH) challenge tests, and endocrine profiles and pregnancy rate were determined after the ovulation was induced by equine or porcine LH. We also compared the effect of superovulation on embryo production and development in vitro to the effect on endocrine profiles and pregnancy rate.[Importance of acute rejection after renal transplantation]. There is an improved survival rate of renal transplant patients and in some countries, the number of waiting patients has increased because of reduced mortality rate. Considering graft survival rate, the main cause of death in the first year after grafting is acute rejection. Following the diagnosis of acute rejection, the number of treatment methods for acute rejection has increased. The precise diagnosis of acute rejection, and the effective treatment, are essential. Antibody-mediated acute rejection (AMAR) is a phenomenon accompanied by mononuclear cell infiltration, and often progresses to chronic rejection, tubular atrophy, interstitial fibrosis, or ureteric obstruction. The diagnosis of AMAR is important. AMAR accompanies the initial occurrence of acute rejection, and also forms scars, leading to chronic rejection. In general, AMAR is mild compared to chronic rejection. Also, AMAR has been reported to respond
