Powell told MSNBC's Andrea Mitchell that though it was "unprecedented" and "unprecedented in living memory" that Trump's supporters would be "surprised" by his presidential run. "There are groups of people who are very patriotic, very strong about their belief, who think that Donald Trump is the one that will restore our national pride, that we need that man in office," Powell said. "My concern is, as a citizen of this country, is that, hey, it's somebody else's country." Powell added that a foreign government seems to be influencing the political climate in the U.S. by making Americans think that Trump is a superior candidate to Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton. "You've got people out there on TV, YouTube, Twitter, Facebook, and elsewhere, saying that Trump is the perfect man for this job," Powell said. Powell added that while he does not believe that the Russian government hacked the Democratic National Committee's computers, it is still a

Most assays in early discovery pipelines today are based on the ability to reliably distinguish between active and inactive compounds, respectively. The subsequent optimization of the active compounds for potency and/or selectivity becomes easier if the inactive compounds are known. However, in many cases, the available inactive leads (or hits) for a target of interest are not good enough to allow the subsequent progression of the compounds toward target-based lead optimization. Here, we describe a strategy for the rapid identification and prioritization of potential hits by combining structure- and activity-based modelling. Applying both approaches to a highly diverse set of kinase activities we 6d1f23a050
