

Authors of STB textbooks are, of course, not responsible for the awful quality of their books. But they do share a long history of cronyism with STB. One genuine attempt to improve STB science textbooks to the level of Sindh's O levels has been vehemently opposed by STB: it was offered by a local science college and STB naturally accepted it. There are two ways of improving the standard of STB science textbooks. One is to insist on the same educational standards for all books, and also insist that STB books are open to free competition. The second is to insist that schools where STB books are used require that the STB books be legally binding on local schools (as is the practice with British O and A level textbooks). This would increase the price of STB books relative to locally produced ones and prevent them from becoming the textbooks of local children. Failing that, every schoolchild should have free access to the best quality science books in the country, from STB or otherwise. Science must be taught impartially using the best available books. Its not good enough just to keep the best for the better off, when they cant afford the STB ones. Pakistani tax-payers should not be asked to subsidize this special privilege. have free access to all of the best quality science texts in the country, from STB or otherwise? Do you think that no subsidy should be paid by tax-payers to STB to support its high quality products? Should STB be prohibited from using proselytizing in STB books, at the expense of impartially describing things as they are? Do you feel that the authors of STB textbooks should be required to observe ethical standards? Do you think its a mistake for provincial governments to use STB books to teach science in
